Description

Condor modeled it after larger kukri specimens from different regions of Nepal and took a special ridge (often called a chirra) in the middle to give the large 32 cm blade a good balance. Condor paid special attention to the taper, the curves and the skeletonization of the 15 cm long handle in order to make the 6.0 mm thick blade usable for everyone. Like most Condor machetes, the King Kukri machete comes with a full leather sheath.
