Description

Have you ever turned your television on and found no channel? That black and white screen you see with a random signal is what is known as White Noise. As white light, white noise contains every frequency with the same potency.

White noise has many practical uses in Music, Electronics Engineering, Computing, etc. but there is one that catch our eye: military. White noise is often used by Military either to code their signals or to interfere their enemy communications with this infinite non-sense loop that can be relaxing and exasperating the same time.
