Description

Borr, the father of Odin, references the Norse origin of the Jesper Voxnæs design, who has designed a compact, yet stoutly dimensioned outdoor, hunting, and tactical knife. As a sought-after specialist for this knife concept, Jesper came up with a compelling design. The mircata grip with its characteristic millwork provides reliable handling in various grip positions, and the deep index finger pocket provides the option to grip far forward for detailed cutting chores. The grip end is formed by a protruding tang that not only houses the lanyard hole, but is also designed to be used as an impact element and hammer surface. In combination with the front bore, a lanyard can be wrapped around the whole hand. Alternatively, the Borr can also be attached to a stick to be used as a harpoon or spear. D2 as the blade steel promises ruggedness and edge-holding, and the stonewash finish accentuates the design's utility. Shipped with premium leather sheath.
